Issues 2 - 3 - 4

The Irish Review of Community Economic Development Law and Policy is a peer-review online journal, published four times a year by the Northside Community Law Centre, in Coolock, Dublin. The journal seeks to offer a platform for interaction that encourages greater scholarly and academic collaboration in the areas of social policy, law and community development, promoting the practice of CED law and policy in Ireland and learn about these initiatives in other countries. The journal also seeks to create channels of collaboration between academia, practitioners and any other interested parties.

We are currently requesting articles on a number of themes pertaining community economic development law and policy, namely, children (Issue 2), community investment and participation (Issue 3), legal services and community legal education (Issue 4). Book reviews and case-studies relevant to these themes are also welcomed.

If you are interested in writing an article, a book review or a case-study, please visit <http://www.nclc.ie/overview/default.asp> or email us at editor@nclc.ie. Articles previously published may be accepted where permission has been granted.

We look forward to your contributions!
